
The temporal protocol mirrors deployment: the detector has the field's own history and is asked about a later season. The cross-field protocol is stricter than deployment — it withholds that history entirely. Reporting both makes clear how much of any published number comes from the evaluation design rather than the model.